Indigenous women in the Americas suffer extreme and disparate levels of gender-based violence. An international panel of indigenous women from Brazil, Guatemala, Peru, and the United States will discuss the need for long-term sustained action in their respective regions and countries to address violence against indigenous women and related deep-rooted issues that intensify such violence, including violations of indigenous peoples' rights to their lands and resources and right of self-government, poverty, climate change, environmental degradation, and other human rights violations.

Co-sponsors are the Alaska Native Women's Resource Center (AKNWRC), the Coordination of the Indigenous Organizations of the Brazilian Amazon (COIAB), the Regional Coordination of Indigenous Peoples of San Lorenzo (CORPI-SL), the Indian Law Resource Center (ILRC), the Interethnic Association of the Development of the Peruvian Amazon (AIDSESP), International Mayan League (IML), the National Indigenous Women's Resource Center (NIWRC), the Native Women's Society of the Great Plains, the Regional Organization of Indigenous Peoples of the East (ORPIO), and Pouhana O Nā Wāhine.
